1. First Section

This text should be pretty easy to edit since its in markdown. This text is italicised, this text is bold, this text is `monospace`, this is a hyperlink.

Here is a quote:

> "Wowee!" - Some guy

Here is a list:

- This is a bullet point list
  - This is a sub-item
- This is the second item

Have another list:

1. Entity 1 - This is a numbered list.
2. Entity 2 - it is pretty cool.

Now here is a table:

| Row 1 | Row 2 |
|---|---|
| First row | 42 |
| Second row | bold item |
| Final row | `monospace text` |

Here is some Python code:

```python
def double(value):
    result = value * 2
    return result
```

Here is some Lua code:

```lua
function double(value)
    local result = value * 2
    return result
end
```

Here is example YAML:

```yaml
comment
key: "value"
name: "bob"
alive: true
age: 67
list:
  - item 1
  - item 2
subentry:
  nested: true
```

```
  anotherList:
  - awesome
```

You can also use this for ASCII art.

```
+------------------+     +------------------+
|    Component A   | --> |    Component B   |
+------------------+     +------------------+
         |                        |
         v                        v
+------------------+     +------------------+
|    Component C   | --> |    Component D   |
+------------------+     +------------------+
```

Remember to reference information. Did you know ducks eat rocks?[1] They also a type of waterfowl.[2] If it isn't clear, this is showcasing how referencing text works. The references section is at the bottom of the report.

Finally let me try an image:

You can also do one from a link like so:

There are some additional Markdown features listed here which you may want to try.

1.1 Subsection

This is useful for splitting up long sections of the report

1.1.1 You can even go further than that, up to 5 I believe

Awesome.

A horizontal line can be used below to seperate major sections.

References

This is how you format sources The only annoying thing as that you need to duplicate the list as by default the sources only appear where they are first cited:
